Cease thy striving, leave thy task:
Done or not, what matters now!
Is there any one will ask
In the grave the why or how!
Leave it all and take thy reat;
Here thou art a welcome guest.

All thy meaning, all thy tears, All the leavy hours of wee, Hates, and jealousies, and fears, All are ever let them go: Quiet death will be thy friend, Restless life have peaceful end.

Fold thy hands thy work is done; Close thine eyes, the night is here; Now has set the weary sun; And the time for sleep is near; All thy tollsome journey past, Thou art safe at home at last.

THE NEW NEIGHBOR

"Girls!" cried Margery Kearney, "I've seen him!-Clive Stearling-our new neighbor!"

In quite a whirl of excitement Margery had dashed into the cosy room where her three sisters were sitting. She was shining with rain from the hood of her silver-gray gossamer to the very tips of her rubbers. The fluffy brown curis across her forehead were sprinkled with bright drops and her cheeks were glowing from her rapid three eager voices. "I really did!"

"Is he handsome?" asked Janet, who appreciated all beauty as intensely as only a plain-looking person can. "Intellectual looking?" inc inquired Clotilde, who dipped daily into Emerson and professed to adore Ruskin.

"Jolly?" queried little Bertie, who was at the age when jolly people seemed created for her especial amuse-

'No-no-no!" laughed Margory. "Not handsome, or learned looking, or even jolly. He is simply the most awkward looking mortal I ever be-

And she broke into a peal of heartiest laughter at recollection of her encounter with their new neighbor.

"You see it was this way, girls," jerking off her gossamer and disclosing a form attired in chocolate cashmere -a form that was trim, slim and willowy as that of sweet seventeen is apt to be. "I was running home in a great hurry-for it's chillier out than you folks imagine—and just as I came opposite the gate of 'The Oaks' I stopped very suddenly, for right there was the most tremendous black dog I ever saw. I said 'Go way!' and he didn't budge. I shook my umbrella at hlm. He wasn't a bit afraid. I said. 'If you don't get out of the way I'll hit you,' and he actually grinned. was nothing to do but step out into the street-it was so muddy, too-and walk around him. But just then-I suppose my dilemma was apparent from the bouse-down the path he came running. Oh, he looked so ridiculous! He is about as tall as Jack's bean-stalk, lean as a lath and brown as an Indian.'

"Well!" exclaimed Janet. "He must be charming!"

"Oh!" cried Margery, going off into a fresh paroxysm of laughter. "What with his glasses, and his coat-tails flying straight out as he rushed to my rescue, he looked like some great, curious, comical bird!"

"Birds don't wear glasses," correct-ed Bertie. "Was his coat a swallow-

The appeal for information was "Well, he called off the dog, and library," sighed Clotilde. "They say 'The Oaks' is a perfect palace as far as the furnishing goes," murmured Janet.

"I think I'll ask him to loan me the lovely little white pony," decided

But this rash resolution was ruthlessly crushed.

"The Oaks" had been shut up so long-ever since the Kearneys had come to live in the gray-green cottage near by. Its owner had gone abroad on the death of his mother, three years ago, leaving his handsome house the care of a couple of servants. But now that news of his return had spread curiosity was rife in the fashionable suburb of River View. And not the least interested were Olive Sterling's near neighbors.

A pleasant room this in which the sisters sat; a home-like room, even if the carpet was threadbare, the chairs venerable, the more home-like for these suggestions of social service and

Janet went on with her task of remodeling an old dress. Clotilde went over to the window, and looked wistfully through the drizzling rain to the red brick chimneys which rose above the house which held the coveted books. Margery, obeying a sudden impulse, had snatched up her everready sketch-book from the table, and was scratching vigorously away. An ecstatic giggle from Bertie, who was peeping over her shoulder, called the attention of the others to her work. What is it?" said Janet.

Margery looked up with a nod and a "Wait a moment." On her brisk pencil flow, the dimoles in her pretty cheeks deepening as her mischievous smile grew.

She held up the open book. The others flocked around to her.

"Oh, Margery!"
"He can't look like that!"

"What a caricature!"

Indeed, comical and grotesque was the drawing of the long, lank figure, with the spidery extremities, the flying coat-tails, the tremendous goggles.

"Oh, just a trifle accentuated not quite a caricature," she said, laughingly, as she scrawled under the pict-ure the words, "Our New Neighbor." "The rain is clearing off!" cried cried ortie. I'm going to run and ask

And off she rushed. Soon, with her kitten in her arms and her little spaniel at her heels, she had quite ceased. The afternoon sun, weary of sulking, was coming out in splendid state. tering jewel, and the pools in the street reflected bits of the brillians

On and on wandered Bertie, her scarlet skirt blowing backward, her yellow hair tangling flossily as the breeze caught and played with it. As she passed "The Oaks," she paused to put her small, inquisitive face against the iron railing and peer through. What a grand, big house it was!

And how smooth and green was the large lawn all lovely with beds of bloom! And how sweet the flowers smelled after the rain—the geraniums. and carnations, and sweet brier, and verbenas.

man Sister Margery saw," she said to herself. And then, just as if she had had a magical ring, her wish was gratified. For out on the main walk, not twelve feet way, from a small side path, came Mr. Sterling. He saw the little maiden outside the ralling—the bright-eyed, curious face. He liked children. He sauntered toward the gate.

"Hello, little lassie! what is your name?"

"Kearney, sir." "Oh! you're one of the Kearney sisters, are you? Which one?"

Bertie hugged her kitten more tightly and looked very important. "I'm not the clever one," she said.

He smiled.

"And you?"

Clotilde is the clever one." "No. Well.

"And I'm not the good one. Janet is the good one."

"Indeed!" "Yes," with a nod. "And I'm not the pretty one, either. Margery is the pretty one."

"Oh, I'm the bad one. At least that is the way Uncle Dick says we ought to be dis-dis-tinguished!"

She was breathless from her struggle with the big word.
"Then," he said, laughter lifting up his quiet brown eyes—"then it was Margery I saw to-day?"

"Yes, and I think," indignantly, "she was all wrong. I don't think you're one bit awkward."

"I think you're downright nice. And some day-not now, because the girls said I mustn't-but some day. when we're better acquainted, I'm go-ing to ask you to let me ride on your little white pony."

He bowed gravely. "Certainly."

"It's so sweet!" growing friendly and confidential. "Do you know that last summer—keep still, Kitty Kearto the pussy, which was writhingly attempting an escape-last summer Margery, who is the grandest artist that ever lived, I think, made a sketch of it when it was out at pasture. Just wait here, and I'll run and get it. Come on Twig."

Away she scampered, her little dog after her. Smiling amusedly, the tall brown gentleman by the gate waited her return.

In about fifteen minutes she was back with a flat book under her arm. "It is in there, and he is eating

He took the book rather diffidently, but very curiously too. It could not matter. Sketches were made to be looked at. And this was a sketch of his own pet pony,

"By George!" He almost dropped the book.

"Oh, please, please," cried Bertie, in an agony of remorse. "I quite forgot your picture was in there. What won't Margery say? Oh, never mind the pony's picture now!"

She snatched the book, turned, ran home as fast as her fat legs would carry her, leaving Clive Sterling crimsoning and laughing as he never had crimsoned and laughed before.

Well. I've seen myself for once as others see me, thanks to the pretty

He dropped his eye-glasses and sauntered back to the house. For several days he neither saw or heard anything of his neighbors. Then he chanced to encounter Bertle.

"Oh, please. I can't talk to you." the child said. "The girls say I'm so un-reliable. You know Margery caught me when I was sneaking her sketchbook back, and made me tell her where I had taken it to."

"And then?" "Then," confessed Bertie, with a contrite gulp, "then she sat down and

"I say! No!"
"She did. There she is now. "Oh,

"She did. There she is now. "Oh, Margery, Margery!"

The girl had come unexpectedly around the corner. To avoid a meeting was impossible. She was quite ar her sister and the master of "The Oaks.

"This is Mr. Sterling, Margery, You know you weren't reg-regularly introduced before. I've been telling him how you cried about--" A delicious blush of mortification, regret, pleading, swept across Margery's wild-rose face. Frankly she held out her hand, lifted her clear eyes. "I am so sorry for having been so ade! Will you forgive me, if you can? And come over and play tennis this afternoon?"

"Thank you. Yes!" he said."
"Why, Margery," the others said to her, when he, after a rattling good game, had returned home, "he is just splendid!"
"Good looking." "Good-looking, too!"

"And a gentleman!"
"All three!" decided Margery, promptly, as she sought the sketch of their new neighbor and deliberately tore it up.

Our Norse Ancestors.

Prof. Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen in a recent lecture indorsed Paul Chailu's theory that the ancestors of the English speaking people were the Norsemen instead of the Angles, Saxons and Jutes, as has long been the accepted belief of historians. He finds proof of this in the old Sagas and the laws of England, which have a striking resemblance to those of ancient Iceland and Norway. But he comes near abandoning his case when he calls to mind that the old Norsemen, when making up a jury to try a man charged with an offense against the law, always selected those who knew the most concerning the matter.

THE SAILOR'S DARING.

"Man overboard! Stand by to lower away the boats!" With what alacrity every "Man overboard! Stand by to lower away the boats!" With what alacrity every man on board springs to his post at the dread cry, knowing a feliow creature's life is at stake! Yet that life is in no more danger than that of the man or woman who trifles with what may seen "a simple blood disorder," but which in reality is fast sowing the seeds of a fatal disease, when the early use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery would cleanse the blood, restore impaired digestion, tone up the vital organs and ward off consumption. It should take the place in the family corresponding to that occupied by the life preserver on shipboard. If taken in time, and given a fair trial, "Golden Medical Discovery" is guaranteed to cure. This it will do if taken in the earlier stages of consumption, but after a large part of the lungs have broken down, no medicine can stay its fatal progress. How important then that the earliest premonitory symptoms be heeded! Short breath, spitting of blood, occasional chilly sensations creeping up the spinal column, hacking cough, variable or poor appetite, feetble digestion, with gradual loss of flesh, cold feet, lassitude or general debility, should admonish one that all is not right.

You can't afford to fool away preclous time if suffering from any considerable number of the above significant symptoms of approaching danger! It's madness to trifle and experiment with uncertain means of relief and cure when thus afflicted! Don't forget, at such a critical time, that the only medicine possessed of such positive curative properties as to warrant its manufacturers in selling it, through druggists, under a positive guarantee of its benefiting or curing in every case, is the world-famed "Golden Medical Discovery." For all Bronchial, Throat and Lung Affections, Weak Lungs, and kindred ailments, it is an unequaled remedy.
